FOREIGN INFLUENCE

(U//FOUO) ADMINISTRATIVE REVISION: Russian Online Malign Influence Increasing in Response to Ukraine Crisis

(U//FOUO) Since September 2021, Russian state media and proxy websites have been increasing the quantity and proportion of anti-Ukrainian and anti-American narratives which likely will intensify as the crisis over Ukraine worsens. This campaign constitutes the most significant Kremlin-driven messaging campaign in the last year. We base this assessment on a DHS database of Russian state media and proxy website publication history and its correlation with Western reports of Russia's military buildup along Ukraine's border.

- (U//FOUO) From September 2021 to January 2022, Russian state media and proxy websites published a greater number of anti-Ukrainian and anti-American narratives on a month-by-month basis than during any preceding period, according to review of a DHS database of Russian outlet publication history and Western news reports (see graphic, below).

(U//FOUO) Ukraine-Focused Article Production by Russian Media Outlets

UNCLASSIFIED//FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY

- (U//FOUO) Since November, Russian state media groups RT and Sputnik have consistently messaged that Russia has no intent to invade Ukraine and that the West fabricated the invasion story as an excuse for its own military buildup, as well as derogatory stories about NATO. RT and Sputnik have also surged their messaging in response to breaking events, such as Western news reports that negatively portray Russia’s interests and Russia-US negotiations, according to a body of Russian state media articles (see graphic, below).

(U//FOUO) Example of a Reactive Narrative to American-Russian Meetings

- (U//FOUO) Russian proxy websites typically published articles with more misinformation, disinformation, and malinformation than Russian state media, according to the DHS database of Russian outlet publication history. Russian proxy websites frequently published articles claiming US forces are deploying to Ukraine’s eastern front and US intelligence services are staging false-flag attacks in Ukraine to instigate conflict, as well as hyping a threat of conventional military attacks on US forces from Russian naval assets in the Black Sea, according to the DHS database (see graphic, below).

Avia Pro: American tanks seen near the border with Ukraine.

The US has begun moving its heavy tanks and light armored vehicles to the border with Ukraine, apparently preparing to use these vehicles to attack Russia. How exactly the tanks and other armored vehicles of the US Armed Forces got into the territory of Romania is unknown, however, it is alleged that the equipment is being transferred towards the Ukrainian border very intensively.

(U) Overview of Russian Malign Influence Efforts Targeting the United States

(U//FOUO) Russia employs a variety of diplomatic, informational, cyber, and economic tools, in what we assess is a wide-ranging strategy to hasten the establishment of a multi-polar world with Russia – and specifically President Vladimir Putin – as an essential player. Moscow typically seeks to weaken US socio-political cohesion and confidence in Western liberal democratic institutions, as well as NATO's unity and resolve. Russia's robust network of state media outlets, covert online journals, and troll farms peddle and amplify pro-Russia and anti-US narratives and carry out acute influence campaigns like hack-and-leak operations. Russia also uses tools of soft power – including cultural outreach groups – in the United States to strengthen overt levers of influence, while covertly directing cyber espionage and efforts toward accessing US critical infrastructure, such as the SolarWinds supply chain compromise. Russia also tries to strengthen economic leverage over US allies and strategically important countries to counter perceived US influence. Thus far, in response to the building conflict with Ukraine, Russian malign influence efforts targeting US audiences have primarily been through online means.

Source, Reference, and Dissemination Information

Source Summary Statement

(U//FOUO) Since September 2021, Russian state media and proxy websites have been increasing the quantity and proportion of anti-Ukrainian and anti-American narratives which likely will intensify as the crisis over Ukraine worsens. We have high confidence in this assessment based on our ability to monitor major Russian state media and proxy websites. Additionally, we note the qualitative evolution of narratives as well as their quantitative appearance on the various websites.
